

DIGITAL EXPERIENCE PROPOSAL

Clocky

A red-carpet journey
for watches worth wanting.

The pain points standing between Clocky's product quality and a premium digital buying experience - followed by a focused plan to close that gap.

The product is not the problem. The experience around it is.

Clocky has strong products and visual material. The current journey breaks that premium feeling before interest becomes a purchase.

01 Arabic feels translated, not localized

The Arabic experience mixes languages and uses inconsistent product wording. A premium buyer should never have to decode the store.

BUSINESS COST: LOWER TRUST

See evidence 01

02 Video interest has nowhere to go

A customer can like a watch inside a video, but cannot move directly to that exact product. Desire is created, then the path stops.

BUSINESS COST: LOST PURCHASE INTENT

See evidence 02

03 The structure feels fragmented

Sections, long product rows and content blocks do not form one clear selling story. Customers browse around instead of moving forward.

BUSINESS COST: MORE FRICTION

See evidence 03

04 Premium products feel ordinary online

The spacing, hierarchy and product presentation do not give each watch enough focus, guidance or perceived value.

BUSINESS COST: LOWER PERCEIVED QUALITY

See evidence 03

05 / PERFORMANCE INSTABILITY

More than 70 console errors were observed. This creates avoidable speed, reliability and tracking risk.

Observations are based on the public Clocky storefront. No analytics or store administration access was used.

The gaps are visible in the journey

Real screenshots captured from clockyeg.com/ar on 14 September 2026.

EVIDENCE 01 / MIXED ARABIC AND ENGLISH

English headings and product naming remain inside the Arabic store.

EVIDENCE 02 / VIDEOS ARE NOT SHOPPABLE

The video row shows watches without a direct path to each product.

EVIDENCE 03 / THE SELLING STORY IS DISTRIBUTED

Attractive pieces, but no guided showroom.

The hero, long product grids, collection blocks, brand rows and a separate video area compete for attention. The customer sees content, but is not led through a deliberate premium journey.

RESULT: INTEREST IS CREATED IN ONE PLACE AND LOST BEFORE THE NEXT STEP

76 console errors

and 7 reported issues

Meta Pixel is loaded; Shopify reports Facebook CAPI enabled.

FAYSAL STUDIO / CLOCKY REVIEW / 04

A watch buyer should feel guided, not left to search.

Watches are a considered, niche purchase. The site should feel like a private showroom: calm, clear and reassuring at every step.

01

Arrival

A distinct Arabic and English welcome, written naturally for each customer.

02

Curated showroom

Browse by style, occasion, budget and product type - with less noise and clearer direction.

03

Shoppable watch story

Every video names the watch and opens its exact product page through a clear 'Shop this watch' action.

04

Confidence lounge

Product type, specifications, close-ups, customer proof, delivery, returns and warranty sit beside the decision.

05

Concierge checkout

A simple checkout and visible WhatsApp support make the final step feel personal and effortless.

Fix the buying journey first. No unnecessary rebuild.

A four-week sprint focused on the points that most affect clarity, trust and purchase intent.

WEEK 1

Map and prioritize

Map the real customer path and rank each issue by purchase impact, effort and urgency.

OUTPUT

A clear experience map

WEEK 2

Design and localize

Restructure the storefront and write Arabic and English experiences intentionally for each audience.

OUTPUT

A premium bilingual design

WEEK 3

Connect and build

Link videos to exact watches, improve product pages and place trust beside every buying decision.

OUTPUT

A connected buying journey

WEEK 4

Test and launch

Test mobile, Arabic, video-to-product paths, performance and edge cases before release.

OUTPUT

A verified first release

THE FIRST SPRINT

Turn every moment of interest into an easy next step.

FAYSAL Studio would redesign the path from arrival to product discovery to purchase - while preserving what Clocky already does well.
